Begin with the End in Mind: Postdoc to Faculty Career Planning

A personal account

Dr. Alexander-Bryant is an assistant professor in Bioengineering at Clemson University and PI of the Nanobiotechnology Laboratory. She has received many honors and awards, including the Gates Millennium Scholarship, honorary student member of the National Academy of Inventors, and a Minority Scholar in Cancer Research Award from the American Association for Cancer Research. Her research focuses on developing drug delivery strategies for treating aggressive and/or drug-resistant cancers using RNA interference and chemotherapy. In this talk, she will share career planning advice to advance from postdoc to faculty.
